The Office, on 14th June, 2025 registered a milestone in the political party registration process with the issuance of provisional registration certificates to six (6) newly formed political parties. The event, held at ORPP headquarters in Nairobi, was presided over by Registrar of Political Parties, Ann Nderitu, CBS, and attended by founding members of the respective parties and ORPP officials.

The political parties awarded provisional registration certificates included: Imarisha Uchumi Party (IUP); People's Forum for Rebuilding Democracy (PFRD); Alliance for Democratic Association (ADA); The Inclusive Party (TIP TIP); United Patriotic Movement (UPM); National Transformation Party (NTP). (See related issuance on pg 7)

In her remarks, Registrar, Ann Nderitu, CBS, congratulated the party founders for reaching this important stage and reminded them that provisional registration is a crucial yet preliminary phase in the full registration process. "You must have ORPP, approved recruitment systems that are compliant with data protection laws. Be thorough with your documentation and organizational structures as you embark on the journey toward full registration," she advised.

The Registrar also urged the party leaders to foster cohesion, integrity, and inclusivity in their internal governance systems. "Accommodate diverse opinions within your leadership and avoid internal conflicts that may derail your efforts. Remain vigilant and watchful of fraudsters who may attempt to exploit your journey."

Assistant Registrar, CPA Florence Biryia, emphasized that registration is not just a formality, but a commitment to uphold the values of democratic governance. "Being registered today is your opportunity to contribute to progress in the political system in Kenya. Stay true to your founding ideologies and adhere to the Political Parties' Code of Conduct during the next phase," she advised.

Speaking on the legal requirements post-provisional registration, Locha Erukudi, Deputy Director, Registration department guided the parties. He stated "From the date of issuance, you have 270 days to meet the legal requirements for full registration. This includes establishing inclusive internal governance structures, conducting legitimate membership recruitment, and opening party offices as required by law," he noted.

ORPP sensitizes parties' PWD leadership , spearheads formation of a disability caucus

The Office, on 4th June 2025, in Nairobi, sensitized leaders of PWDs party leagues drawn from over 47 registered political parties. The engagement aimed to assess the milestones achieved in advancing disability inclusion within political parties, identify existing gaps, and chart pathways for enhanced participation and representation of PWDs in Kenya's political landscape.

Speaking during the forum, Registrar Ann Nderitu, CBS, emphasized the indispensable role of inclusive political processes, stating, "The political and electoral processes cannot be complete without the inclusion of all demographics, including Persons with Disabilities. You must enhance your collective efforts to advocate for and protect the rights and spaces of PWDs within political parties and the broader society."

One of the major outcomes of the meeting was the formation of a PWDs Caucus, comprising representatives from political parties with the guidance and support of ORPP. The caucus will serve as a structured platform for advocacy, engagement, and coordination of initiatives aimed at promoting meaningful inclusion. A select committee was also constituted to steer the caucus's agenda, with a focus on enhanced funding mechanisms, awareness campaigns, capacity building and inter-party collaboration to support PWDs' active political participation.

Assistant Registrar, Ali Abdullahi, hailed the initiative as a progressive step toward inclusive governance. He reaffirmed ORPP's commitment to supporting PWDs through policy formulation, legal reforms, and structured sensitization programmes. "Political parties must integrate inclusive strategies that go beyond tokenism to truly uphold the rights of PWDs," he noted.

Compliance department's Deputy Director, Political Parties Capacity Building, Anastacia Kaberere, leading the programme, urged participants to reflect on their roles and contributions within their respective parties. "You need to interrogate your roles as PWDs in political parties and actively involve yourselves in party leadership and decision-making processes," she challenged.

Staff interrogates reviewed HR instruments

The Office continues to affirm its position as an employer of choice through the ongoing review and refinement of critical Human Resource (HR) instruments. In a blended engagement session held on May 26th 2025 bringing together both in-person and virtual participants staff convened to discuss the latest updates to HR frameworks that shape career growth, organizational efficiency, and staff development.

Key instruments under review included the Organogram, Grading Structure, and Career Progression Guidelines all designed to reflect the evolving needs of the organization and its growing human capital base.

Speaking during the session, Registrar of Political Parties, Ann Nderitu, CBS, emphasized the significance of aligning HR policies with emerging legal, policy, and workforce dynamics.

“The ORPP prides itself as an employer of choice through continuous development and review of such instruments. These frameworks are not only vital in ensuring a competent and motivated workforce, but also in enhancing career advancement in specialized areas,” she noted.

“As we serve, let us uphold our values and maintain our collective commitment to excellence.”

Assistant Registrar, Ali Abdullahi, reiterated the forward-looking nature of the reforms, stating “We are design ing ORPP for the future ensuring optimal opportunities for all through clearly defined career development paths across all cadres.”

He also led in addressing questions and clarifying matters raised by staff during the interactive session.

CPA Florence Biry, also an Assistant Registrar, encouraged staff to adopt a mindset that embraces change, emphasizing that agility and adaptability are essential to leveraging the opportunities presented by new systems.

Head of Human Resource Management, D. Mwendwa, who spearheaded the forum, underscored the role of personal accountability in career growth. “Each of us must take charge of our individual career development and align with the stipulations outlined in the HR instruments,” she urged.

Senior Chief Finance Officer/Director of Finance who also chaired the ORPP Job Description and Evaluation Committee (JDAC) appreciated the growth of ORPP human capital structures including expanded job horizons. He called on staff to take advantage of well-defining career progression to advance their career as they apply their skills to the service o ORPP.

His counterpart, Director of Compliance, D.N. Kinuthia, urging staff to always make reference to the progressive instruments as they undertake their duties.

Staff present lauded the instruments as a premise to their professional development and efforts towards excellence in service delivery.

The grading structure was further subjected to Salaries and Remuneration Commission (SRC) who have since released the grading outcome out of the Job Descriptions submitted. The process will conclude by SRCs releasing ORPP salaries pegged on the new gradings.

Registrar mentors youth in politics and governance

As part of its ongoing commitment to fostering inclusive governance, the Office continues to champion the empowerment of youth in political and leadership spaces. This was evident during a high-level roundtable discussion held on 7th May, in Nairobi, where Registrar of Political Parties, Ann Nderitu, CBS, was among the lead speakers.

The event, hosted by Konrad-Adenauer-Stiftung (KAS), brought together young leaders drawn from universities and political parties, aiming to deepen their understanding and engagement in the political and policy-making processes. The focus was on practical avenues for youth involvement in political parties, leadership structures, and electoral systems.

Speaking during the session, Registrar Ann Nderitu lauded the initiative, emphasizing the importance of youth-driven reforms and active participation.

“I urge young people to utilize political party structures to advocate for reforms that enhance political engagement and democratic accountability,” she said. She further noted that youth are not merely future leaders but key players in the present democratic landscape.

The Registrar also elaborated on ORPP's multi-faceted initiatives to promote youth inclusion, which included; Monitoring compliance by political parties in meeting youth representation thresholds as per legal and policy requirements; Ensuring political party structures are youth-responsive and provide opportunities for meaningful involvement; Continuous capacity building and mentorship programs targeting youth leaders within parties; Development of manuals and policy guidelines tailored to support youth-friendly party policies; Encouraging political parties to allocate resources specifically for youth development within their broader programs. These efforts, she stated, are aimed at equipping young people with the tools and institutional support necessary to navigate and influence political spaces constructively.

Country Director of Konrad Adenauer Stiftung (KAS), Mathias Kamp, reinforced the importance of youth in strengthening democratic governance.

“Youth must be seen not just as participants but as shapers of political thought and champions of responsive leadership,” he remarked.

The interactive forum featured in-depth training on topics such as: Political identity and ideology; Roles and functions of political parties; Strategies to enhance youth participation in politics; The mandate and functions of ORPP.

The ORPP officers from the Partnerships and Linkages, and Registration departments were also present, providing technical insights and engaging directly with participants.

Participants expressing enthusiasm and a renewed sense of purpose to advocate for youth-centered policies within their respective institutions and political parties.

New staff matriculated urged to uphold ORPP service standards

The ORPP held an orientation for newly appointed staff on 3rd June 2025. The meeting was for their understanding of the mandate, structures and operations of various functions of the Office.

Registrar of Political Parties, Ann Nderitu, CBS, welcomed the new team members and encouraged them to embrace ORPP's values and uphold its governance standards, “I urge you to understand our strategic focus areas and adhere to our operational standards in line with public service structures,” she said, emphasizing the importance of contributing meaningfully and safeguarding the institution's reputation.

Assistant Registrar, Ali Abdullahi, congratulated the new staff on their appointment and encouraged them to fully embrace their roles. “Understand our culture, uphold our standards, and actively participate in the implementation of ORPP’S mandate,” he said, highlighting the importance of living the organization’s core values.

Sessions in the orientation programme included briefing on mandate and functions, organizational structure, political party registration processes, field services, HR policies and the ORPP service delivery charter, among other key areas. The session was coordinated by the Human Resource Department.
